1 Wood White Leptidea sinapis Linnaeus, family Pieridae.

A frail-looking butterfly occurring locally throughout most of Europe from sea level to 1,900 metres. In Ireland, England and Wales it is confined to the southern counties, where it may be found in woodland rides and clearings in spring and summer.

2 Meadow Brown Maniola jurtina Linnaeus, family Satyridae.

A very common and widespread species occurring in Ireland, Britain and all parts of Europe except the extreme north. Habitats are fields, roadsides and woodland margins from sea level to 1,800 metres. They may be seen in flight from June through to September.

3 Marbled White Melanargia galathea Linnaeus, family Satyridae.

This is the commonest and most widespread of a group of distinctly marked butterflies occurring throughout central and southern Europe, England and South Wales. Habitats are rough fields, downland and woodland margins from sea level up to 1,700 metres. These butterflies may be seen on the wing in June and July.

4 Peacock Inachis io Linnaeus, family Nymphalidae.

This common and distinctive butterfly is found throughout Europe, Ireland and Britain, its distribution extending across temperate Asia to Japan. This species may be seen in orchards, gardens and other places where flowers abound, from July until late autumn.

5/7 Orange Tip Anthocharis cardamines Linnaeus, family Pieridae.

This butterfly occurs throughout Europe with the exception of southern Spain, northern Scotland and northern Scandinavia and Finland. Its range extends eastwards across temperate Asia to China and Japan. The usual habitats are along hedgerows, in meadows and in woodland clearings. It may be found at altitudes above 2,000 metres in the Alps and is on the wing for about two months around April/May according to locality.

6 Large White Pieris brassicae Linnaeus, family Pieridae.

The range of this extremely common butterfly extends throughout Europe, with the exception of northern Scandinavia, to North Africa and the Himalayas. It is on the wing April/May and July/August and is common in gardens and the margins of cultivated fields.

8 Small Tortoiseshell Aglais urticae Linnaeus, family Nymphalidae.

A common and widespread butterfly occurring throughout Europe and extending across Siberia to Japan from sea level to 3,000 metres. Preferred habitats are fields, roadsides and gardens and they can be seen on the wing from March until October.

9/11 Common Blue Polyommatus icarus Rottemburg, family Lycaenidae.

This widespread and common butterfly is found from North Africa to the Arctic. It occurs almost everywhere in Britain and specimens from Ireland are considered a distinct race. Habitats for this species include lowland meadows and hillsides up to an altitude of about 2,000 metres. Butterflies may be found on the wing from April to September.

10 Large Heath Coenonympha tullia Müller, family Satyridae.

An interesting and variable species widespread in central and northern Europe, also occurring locally in parts of the south. Its range extends eastwards across temperate Asia and includes North Africa. This butterfly is found in northern parts of England and Wales and is widespread in Ireland and Scotland, its habitat ranging from lowland marshes and bogs to moorlands and wet mountain meadows up to 2,300 metres. They are on the wing in June and July.

12 Swallow tail Papilio machaon Linnaeus, family Papilionidae.

This large butterfly is widely distributed throughout Europe and also occurs in North Africa. In the British Isles it is confined to the fens of Norfolk, Suffolk and Cambridge, whilst in Europe it occurs in meadows and flowering hillsides up to 2,000 metres from April until August.
